

The Price of Housing

Part IV

By Ciarán Handley

6th September 2018

The Road to Taoiseach

Chapter 1

Government Regulation

If and when I come in as Taoiseach I have an idea to drop the price of houses substantially

The idea is that the government would regulate the price of housing rather than market forces as is currently the case. Which is much fairer. If one has the right government.

To explain how this would work I'll need to work through the explanation step-by-step.

Which I will do as we progress through the documents.

We are getting there.

Maybe it's the boots. "Buongiorno girls!"

Supergirl – Extended "Wonder Woman" Promo

That's me.

The idea of government regulating the price of housing rather than market forces is closer to Communism than to Capitalism. Which is perfectly fine.

You see in this case that idea, which is more in line with Communist thinking, is very appropriate.

There are some good ideas in Capitalism. But it is a flawed system. There are also some good ideas in Communism. But that is also a flawed system.

I suggest taking ideas from whatever works. If there are good ideas in Communism, then look at these ideas closely. That does not mean that one has to implement the system of Communism itself.

Capitalism has some good ideas too. But it is also a flawed system. That said, take what seems to work and look closely at that.

Austin Powers – The cold war is over

The Price of Housing

End of Part IV