Wolfe Tone

Chapter 1

Let me tell you a story about how Wolfe Tone secured 14,000 French troops from Napoleon to aid Ireland in her war against Britain

Historians don't know this story. You won't find it in any book. This story I got in Shamanic Vision a few years ago.

So I do believe it to be true.

The story is how Wolfe Tone managed to persuade Napoleon to send 14,000 troops to aid Ireland in her war against Britain

The year was 1796. Ireland was penniless. We didn't have the weapons to mount an offensive against Britain. We didn't have the money for arms. We had nothing.

How to achieve a large result with absolutely nothing – this is often the way with revolutionaries. Let me tell you something about revolutionaries. They are almost always broke. Penniless. Most revolutions are done on a shoestring.

The year was 1796. Ireland was penniless. Yet we needed help. So Wolfe Tone decided to go to France to ask the French for aid in our war against Britain.

Here was the problem. Ireland had nothing to offer. We were penniless. Wolfe Tone had absolutely nothing to offer Napoleon.

Yet in 1796 Napoleon committed a fleet of 43 ships and 14,000 men to help Ireland in her war against Britain

It was an enormous force. Enormous.

How did Wolfe Tone secure it? When he had nothing to offer?

He secured it by calling Napoleon a little bollocks

As he told the story to me (in Vision), Wolfe Tone had nothing to lose. He was on the run from the English, in exile. I think he had aspirations of Taoiseach too – Ireland was his island.

Let me set the scene.

Braveheart – The mad Irishman

Wolfe Tone told me he had nothing to lose. The English were going to shoot him anyway. Which is why he called Napoleon a little bollocks. The way Wolfe Tone had it figured, if it worked out then Napoleon would help. If it didn't, Napoleon would have him shot. But either way he had nothing to lose, for the English were going to shoot him anyway.

When he called Napoleon a little bollocks Napoleon for a moment was in absolute shock. He stood there stupefied. Just for a moment. Unsure what to say or do. And then Napoleon burst out laughing.

And then he gave Wolfe Tone 14,000 troops.
